The Commonwealth Games are a sports competition, held every four years. The participants must be amateurs (meaning they are not paid to play), and they must be from a Commonwealth country. The Commonwealth is a group of countries, most of which were part of the British Empire.

The Commonwealth Games Federation (CGF) is responsible for organizing the Commonwealth Games.

More than 50 countries send athletes to participate in the Commonwealth games. The sports include archery, athletics (track and field), badminton, basketball, boxing, cricket, cycling, diving, fencing, gymnastics, field hockey, judo, rugby, rowing, squash, swimming, table tennis, triathlon, weight lifting, and wrestling. Most of the sports have both men's and women's events.

Apart from being one of the most famous multi-sporting events in the world, the Commonwealth Games are also one of the most inclusive. Athletes with a disability are considered full members of their national teams, which means the medals they earn are counted with their country's. It is also the first global sporting event to have an equal number of men's and women's events.

The opening ceremony, the Queen's Baton Relay, usually started at Buckingham Palace where Queen Elizabeth II, as the head of the Commonwealth, inserted a message into the baton. During the opening ceremony, it was given back to her, so she could read it aloud. From there, the games commenced.
